PREFACE

This Queensland extension to the Australian Standard Offence Classification has been developed and revised by the Office of Economic and Statistical Research for use by criminal justice agencies in Queensland.

The national classification was developed in 1997, and revised in 2008, by the Australian Bureau of Statistics. The Queensland extension provides a greater level of detail in certain parts of the classification. It is intended for use in the compilation, analysis and publication of crime and justice statistics by Queensland agencies.

Development of the Queensland extension was a joint project involving key agencies, namely the Queensland Police Service, the Department of Justice and Attorney-General, the Department of Community Safety, the Department of Communities and the Department of Premier and Cabinet.

This second edition of the Queensland extension follows the revision of the national classification, and was completed in consultation with these same agencies as well as the Australian Bureau of Statistics. Changes to the Queensland extension have been made in response to changes to the national classification.

The participation and assistance of these agencies is gratefully acknowledged.

Introduction to the Australian Standard Offence Classification (Queensland extension)

Background

The Australian Standard Offence Classification (ASOC) provides a uniform national statistical framework for classifying offences for use by criminal justice agencies in Australia. It was developed by the Australian Bureau of Statistics (ABS) in consultation with criminal justice agencies and was first released in 1997 (ABS Cat. no. 1234.0).

The Queensland extension

As part of the process of implementing ASOC, Queensland agencies have developed an extended version of the classification. This has been done to allow a number of distinctions to be made which are considered important by Queensland agencies.

The Queensland extension adds a fourth level to the three-level national classification. In addition to the levels of division, subdivision and group, the Queensland version contains a subgroup level. The code at this level is the four-digit group code with a fifth digit appended.

For groups which were not subdivided, the subgroup name is the same as that of the group and the fifth digit is a 1. Residual subgroups have codes ending in 9 and most have '(remainder)' in the name.

This document

This document follows the national classification in content and layout. The structure of the classification shows the divisions, subdivisions and groups as given in the national classification as well as the subgroups of the Queensland extension.

The definitions (and lists of inclusions and exclusions) for the divisions, subdivisions and groups are reproduced from the national standard and appear in the left-hand column. Definitions (and lists of inclusions and exclusions) for the subgroups appear in the right-hand column.

The alphabetical index gives the appropriate subgroup code for offences described in words. It includes additional entries not given in the national publication. The numerical index contains the same information in order of QASOC code.

Supplementary codes

When the data provided are inadequate to allow a five-digit subgroup to be allocated, a supplementary code may be applied. Supplementary codes may be generated by taking a four-digit group code and adding a single zero to it to make a five-digit code.

In any instances where a group cannot be selected, the most suitable subdivision (or division) is selected and two (or three) zeroes are appended to its code to make a five-digit code.

The name used for these supplementary codes is the name of the group (or subdivision or division) followed by 'not further defined'.

If the data provided cannot be assigned to any ASOC division, then the five-digit code of 99991 can be used. If no data at all are provided, then the five-digit code of 99981 can be used. These codes correspond to the four-digit codes (9999 and 9998 respectively) given in the national classification.

Further information

The explanatory notes included in the revised national publication and the coding guidelines issued by ABS in August 2008 also apply to the revised Queensland extension.
